

CORRESPONDENCE (1)

HEIDI WOOD

Well it was somewhat of a surprise that I awoke last Sunday
(a week ago)
to find it was indeed my eightieth birthday.

We had a cool day for it, shower here and there, but not bad.
And although we had to make a dash from the car at the winery,
it was only very light.

And soon cleared up and got a bit less
Grey over lunch.

Dad and me, and huge surprise my only Brother, Bart.
(Unexpectedly).
With his faithful
Oxygen tank, in tow. He has lung cancer.
Still, wonderful to see him.
And auntie Daphne,
From Crib Point.

Dad let me read your letter, and hope you are now back on the water supply. Might be an idea to do what we have done.... got some water carriers, I filtered the water, poured it through A funnel into the three, so if a emergency happens to the supply, at least we have some water to put into the kettle. Dad said beforehandwe don't need them, we could always fill the bath. I said, how do you fill the bath if the pipes are broken -- beforehand. Oh yes, says dad.

Now... I want to say, things are very iffy at the moment in the world, and I'm not joking about this but I have stopped being a humanist and asked Jesus to come into this home.

So much ugly stuff going on in the dark realm.
How those in high places are reptiles,
and the pedophiles,
and the bathomets,
it's everywhere and what can you do?

What with the CERN people raising Osiris in 2017

And giants thawing out, in Antarctica,
we need to be grounded in goodness,
even the very elect will be fooled unless they get wise,
time is very short.
Harriet seems to be going with Oprah's rubbish.
We are all gods, notice little g.
Wait until the blue beam and everyone's gods appear.

What with the white gent in Rome trying to get everybody to unite. Bring your idols and put them on our altars.
Babylon is alive and well.
I watched a video of a mass
at s/peters to Lucifer.

I hear
Some sincere RCs are quite shocked at some of the things
he says,
not Christian at all.

Well I'd better head off to bed, Dad's been there for an hour, so....
hope you're both well,
goodnight Boys.
God Bless you both, and Love from Mums XXXXXX

CORRESPONDENCE (1)

© Heidi Wood 2018